One of the most important phases of hog production is sanitation. Hogs should be moved out of old lots and pens and put in new ground, preferably with small grain, or other grazing crops. When needed treat pigs for worms and kill external parasites with motor oil.

Grain may be conserved by supplementing with a mixture of one-half tankage and one-half cottonseed or peanut meal, or peanut meal alone (a gallon to a bushel of corn).

To be more certain of getting strong litters of pigs, pregnant sows must be fed a good balanced ration. Good brooding practices may then be followed to save all pigs possible.
